

TOO MUCH FIRE CLAY

The Helena Board of Trade Has Received More Than It Wants.

AN IDAHO SCHOOL TEACHER

The Proposal to Place the Spokane Indians in Idaho Points on Transplanting Trees, Shrubs and Plants.

Of the many mistakes that are made on the farm there is probably none more serious than that of improperly transplanting fruit trees, shrubs and plants. Half the battle of life in the newly planted tree or other plant is in the start it gets when transplanted. Apple trees, currant and raspberry bushes if properly planted and irrigated should start early and attain a good length of new growth the first year and when we see them starting late and making no new growth the first season, we conclude that the principal fault has been in their manner of planting. Sometimes of course there are other causes. If too many of the principal roots be cut short trees will be very slow to put forth leaves and the new growth if at all will be very short. But the same result will occur from poor planting. Trees of all kinds for transplanting should be dug up with the utmost care for their preservation. None of the principal roots should be cut, and in fact all of the roots should be sound if possible. When taken up care should be taken not to let the underground parts become dry. They should be covered and kept moist. Before planting the holes should be all dug, and they should be twice as deep as the tree has stood underground and large enough so that the roots can be placed nearly as they originally stood without cramping or breaking. Just before setting the tree hole should be half filled with damp soil, then lower the tree, hold it erect, straighten the roots and cover five or six inches with soil, then raise the tree slightly so as to cause the roots to move and the soil to fill in around them. After adding more soil tramp moderately with the foot, then fill up an inch or two above ground, break the trees up by tamping to stakes, so that the strong winds will not uproot them, then turn the water close enough that its seepage will moisten the roots. This planted there will be no difficulty about the early and rapid growth.

Since advertising for fire clay to be tested in the east, the secretary of the board of trade has received such a large quantity that he does not know what to do with it. A shipment was made of a large number of samples some time ago, and now there are on hand as many more and still they come. And while it is gratifying to know that such a great variety of fire clay exists, and is disseminated throughout the entire state, there must be a limit to the number of specimens sent on for analysis. The time in which these were to be sent has already expired and it may be as well for those having clay for analysis to know that the limit has been exceeded, unless the board of trade sees fit to take the matter in hand and serve all comers alike. Some action will doubtless be taken at the next meeting looking to a proper disposition of the large amount of clay specimens now on hand. In the meantime Secretary Eddy has fire clay to throw at birds. —Helena Herald.

Says the Kendrick Gazette: There is on exhibition in the county surveyor's office a curiosity which has attracted the attention of hundreds of people, since mention was made of it in a recent issue of the Gazette. It is nothing more or less than the numbers and letters which the government surveyors cut on a large tree over 20 years ago to mark the corner of a range and section. The point had been lost and County Surveyor Tammatt found it last July by cutting into one of the trees which he thought likely to bear the marks. He discovered at a depth of several inches the marks, R. 3 N. 32, in raised form, the growth of the tree bringing out the letters in this manner. It is of great interest to arboriculturists.

A man from Idaho was in town today. He was relating some incidents that occurred in the neighborhood of Pocatello, and among others told the Helena Herald the following: One time a school man came out to Pocatello to teach the young idea how to shoot. She was a comely lass and was ambitious to become a landowner. She had no trouble in finding a desirable tract upon which to locate, and filed upon it without unnecessary delay. But in Idaho, as everywhere else, there are some mighty mean men. One of these coveted the school teacher's land, and while he would have hesitated about jumping a man's claim, he had no fear of a woman, and so moved on and took possession. The case was taken into court by the school teacher, and came on for trial before a justice of the peace at Pocatello. The jumper secured the services of a tinsmith lawyer to represent him, and when the case was called the lawyer got up to make a plea for his client. But he had scarcely uttered a word when the judge roared out: "Take your seat, sir! This court don't want to hear a word out of you. It's mind is already made up. My opinion is that a man who would jump a claim from a woman ought to be hung; but since this can't be done I will fine the jumper one hundred dollars and costs." And that settled it. The school man was never molested again, and now owns the finest ranch in that section of Idaho.

The Spokane Indians.

Senator Dubois has done wrong in renewing his opposition to the proposal to place the Spokane Indians upon the Coeur d'Alene reservation in Idaho. These miserable remnants of a once powerful band are entirely harmless, and laying aside all question of humanitarianism, the people of Spokane have no objections to their presence in this vicinity. They bother nobody, menace neither life nor property, are possessed of a kindly disposition, and rather add to the picturesque of the city and its surroundings. But that is not the consideration. The presence here of these harmless Ishmaelites—their struggle for subsistence in a country that was once entirely theirs—is a reproach to civilization. The people of Spokane desire that justice should be done to the Spokane, and that they should be endowed with permanent homes and given an opportunity to educate their children. No person here would object to these Indians being placed upon the Colville reservation in this state, but they have set their hearts upon the Coeur d'Alene reservation and their desire ought to be respected.

When Senator Dubois raised an objection to the arrangement he was doubtless influenced by an overstrained sentiment of the rights of his state. The people of other states have objected vigorously in the past to quartering upon their domain of hostile bands from other states, and with justice, as in the case of the proposed removal of the murderous Utes from the present Colorado reservation into Utah. But this is an altogether different proposition. For one reason the Indians have no home at present; for another they are neither numerous nor treacherous, and for still another, they will carry into Idaho a new element of wealth in the form of the assistance to be given them under the treaty. —Spokane Review.

A Lumberman's Rendevouz.
This term might be applied to Stevens Point, located on the Wisconsin Central line, at the gateway to the vast forest region, which extends north to Lake Superior, a distance of 200 miles without a break, on account of its vast lumber interests. The Wisconsin river, to which the lumbermen have given the familiar and somewhat affectionate title of "Old Wisconsin," not alone acts as a lumber feeder to the city by furnishing through its numerous tributaries an outlet for thousands of acres of pine in the upper country, but it furnishes a water power which is second to that only of Niagara and Menasha, which cities are also located on the "Central." Millions of feet of lumber are cut every year, giving employment to hundreds of men. In addition to the lumber trade, it has numerous other manufacturing industries; it is here where the large car shops of the Wisconsin Central line are located.
